

Are you paying to process the same data in multiple matters?

Integreon

Insightful Outsourcing. Remarkable Results.

Integreon, a legal process outsourcing (LPO) provider, was supporting a pharmaceutical company that, due to the nature of the business, dealt with countless lawsuits each year. The company was spending significant time, money, and resources processing and reviewing the same data over and over — and was incurring unnecessary costs as a result.

Integreon sought a solution to help its client get intelligence and value out of previous work that had been completed by identifying documents that had been processed in prior cases to avoid processing the same data multiple times.

“ Mindseye’s unique ability to query a client’s existing case data and identify only data that had not been previously processed made it possible to offer this solution to the client. ”

- Elton Vaz
director at Integreon

The amount of new data that needs to be processed decreases as more and more of that data is processed and stored for use in Mindseye. This also helps the client incorporate real data into their early case assessment process for better insight into required time, costs and resources.

Can your system do that?

Whether you are a law firm or a corporate legal department, if your processing system can’t deliver insight and value across cases, you may be spending time and money on re-processing the same data over and over.

“ Over the course of multiple matters, we expect the pharmaceutical company could save as much as 40% on the cost of processing. ”
